

Sculptor creates bronze of Major General Eldon Bargewell

TOM QUIGG / COURTESY PHOTO

Workers install the base for the bronze sculpture of Major General Eldon Bargewell in Hoquiam.

Another Harborite — Rip Caswell — from Montesano, world-renowned for his art

TOM QUIGG
For The Daily World

Editor's note: This is the second of a two-part series titled The Soldier and the Sculptor.

Part I featured war hero Major General Eldon Bargewell and was published in the Thursday edition of The Daily World. The story is timely as a new plaza in a triangle park in Hoquiam will be the site of a bronze statue dedication May 20.

The sculptor for the Major General Eldon Bargewell memorial is one of the most accomplished bronze sculptors in America.

Rip Caswell creates his sculptures in his studio in Wood Village, Oregon, with a gallery in nearby Troutdale. If you want to see bronze sculptures like you've never seen before, his gallery is the place to go.

There is an interesting back story on how the sculptor was chosen. As ideas began to focus, a bronze statue was discussed, and I recalled nationally acclaimed bronze sculptor Rip Caswell from Montesano. Rip was one of three sculptors asked by the Major General Eldon Bargewell Committee to submit proposals, and was delighted to have an opportunity to be considered for a major sculpture in what

See SOLDIER, Page A8

Soldier

From Page A1

Editor's note: This is the second of a two-part series titled The Soldier and the Sculptor. Part 1 featured war hero Major General Eldon Bargewell and was published in the Thursday edition of The Daily World. The story is timely as a new plaza in a triangle park in Hoquiam will be the site of a bronze statue dedication May 20.

The sculptor for the Major General Eldon Bargewell memorial is one of the most accomplished bronze sculptors in America.

Rip Caswell creates his sculptures in his studio in Wood Village, Oregon, with a gallery in nearby Troutdale. If you want to see bronze sculptures like you've never seen before, his gallery is the place to go.

There is an interesting back story on how the sculptor was chosen. As ideas began to focus, a bronze statue was discussed, and I recalled nationally acclaimed bronze sculptor Rip Caswell from Montesano. Rip was one of three sculptors asked by the Major General Eldon Bargewell Committee to submit proposals, and was delighted to have an opportunity to be considered for a major sculpture in what he refers to as his "hometown community."

Rip was originally called to my attention by his high school classmate, Karen McDonald. On her recommendation I wrote a story on Rip published in The Daily World on Sept. 2, 2007. Much of the following is from that story.

Rip's family moved to Montesano when he was in the sixth grade, and he graduated from Montesano High School in 1981. The family lived in a small house at the end of Schafer Boom Road, which was the old "boom shack" converted to a home by his father.

Rip learned his artistic skills while in Montesano, first learning taxidermy, doing work for local hunters. With his parents' encouragement Rip pursued his interest in taxidermy, and understudied with the renowned taxidermist Bill Lancaster of Beaver Creek, Oregon.

In 1992 the Caswell Gallery opened in Troutdale, Oregon. As his recognition grows, so do the requests for his art. His life-size bronze wildlife sculptures have become centerpieces for large developments, homes, museums and major parks. Rip also creates a wide array of bronze sculptures, including several of military and other notables.

On June 25, 2007, the Tom McCall Memorial Committee, a group formed by former political associates and environmental groups, announced the commission of a "larger-than-life" bronze sculpture to honor former Gov. Tom McCall likeness of Gov. McCall fishing for steelhead in Salem's Riverfront Park.

Rip Caswell

In 2008 Rip completed a sculpture commissioned by friends and classmates of U.S. Army Pfc. Thomas Tucker of Madras, Oregon, who was abducted and killed while on patrol in Iraq in June 2006. The statue shows Pfc. Tucker reaching out to aid an Iraqi citizen. In 2013 Caswell created an 11-foot-tall bronze statue of Admiral Nimitz, which is erected at the Pearl Harbor Memorial in Honolulu.

Caswell's wildlife sculptures have earned him a reputation as one of the leading authorities in wildlife art. In 2008 a nationally televised PBS show featured Rip as he created his sculptures. In the program by Producer Neil Rogers titled "Discover the Wild," Rogers is attributed as saying that "he has never seen a sculptor in the United States that captures the emotion, spirit and anatomy of an animal as well as Rip Caswell." A video of the program can be viewed on www.caswellsculpture.com.

Rip's talent is evident, however, he will tell you that without the mentorship of three special people in Montesano, his life wouldn't be the same today.

He turned out for the wrestling team at Montesano High School, and at first had no self confidence, losing nearly every match.

Kenichi Kanno was the wrestling coach and art instructor. Kenichi had been an All-American Wrestler at Grays Harbor College, and took a real interest in Rip, in particular working on his self confidence. Rip vividly recalls the defining moment in one match where he was about to be pinned, and based on what Kenichi had been telling him, "I thought. What if I really tried?" He added, "At that moment I was able to get away from the opponent, and win the match."

While in school, Rip began working on the Peterson Ranch for the Gib and Botch Peterson families. The ranch was near the Caswell home, and it was Gib and Botch who instilled a strong work ethic within him.

Rip gets very thoughtful when telling, "They were truly grounded in their work ethic and philosophy of hard work." He said the Petersons taught him "to dedicate yourself to whatever you're doing with your whole heart. Whether it's shoveling manure, bailing hay, bucking logs or as a mechanic's helper."

As a youth Rip managed the ranch for four years, and about a year after high school graduation, Kenichi Kanno came out to the farm to visit him. Kenichi understood that Rip really of Oregon, who was known for his "wide-ranging environmental achievements." It's a 10-foot-tall likeness of Gov. McCall fishing for steelhead in Salem's Riverfront Park.

COURTESY RIP CASWELL

The bronze sculpture of Major General Eldon Bargewell will be dedicated in Hoquiam on Armed Forces Day, Saturday, May 20.

enjoyed working on the farm, but knew his art and taxidermy skills should be put to use. Rip remembers the exact words Kanno told him that day. "Rip what are you doing? You can achieve much more than this." He recalled Kenichi then saying "You can do better than this." And then repeating "You can do better than this. You can achieve great things."

Caswell acknowledges "this was the seed" that changed his direction. And, because of his interest in wildlife and the outdoors, he began his pursuit of taxidermy and wildlife sculptures.

Rip remembers coming back home to Montesano for Kenichi's funeral and wishing that his former art instructor, wrestling coach and mentor could have seen what his student had been able to accomplish because of the inspiration of Kenichi Kanno.

Although he lives and works in the Troutdale area, he says he "always considers Montesano his home." Moreover, he considers Kenichi, Gib and Botch as the cornerstones for whatever success he has. After reading "The Harbor - a Culture of Success" at the website www.culture-of-success.com, he believes "the foundation experienced on the Harbor played a role in whatever success the people listed have." "Growing up in Grays Harbor instills common sense, responsibility, and grounds you." And finally,